NOTE: This course is designed to help students deeply engage contemporary poetry and its trends, produce publishable work and become fluent in the language of contemporary poetry broadly and in one particular aspect of that conversation specifically. In this iteration of the course, we will focus on the elegiac poems. The elegy, a poem addressing a lack or loss (something or someone missing), has a long and rich history. In this course, we will read some of classic elegies on line and, through five monograph books, explore the range of manifestation and technique in the contemporary manifestations of elegiac verse (pre-elegy, elegy, post-elegy). We will pay special attention to definition by absence, how poetic effects are achieved and why (or if) the elegy was the best vehicle for expressing the author's vision. Students will produce at least ten

*3477	IDIS 335-001	FUNDAMENTALS OF INTERDIS	4	LEC	MWF	12:00PM -12:50PM	PH 277	STAFF
		NOTE: This course provides a foundation for, models of, and practice in interdisciplinary scholarship. The purpose and value of integrating multiple-disciplines will be explored and assessed. Students will be required to consider, design, and initiate interdisciplinary research, as well as apply tenets of interdisciplinary studies to an individual research project for the one-credit course enhancement. The interdisciplinary lens in this course will focus on the particular topic of American English, its history, use, and global impact.
*3479	IDIS 335-002	FUNDAMENTALS OF INTERDIS	4	LEC	MW	03:00PM -04:15PM	PH 258	STAFF
		NOTE: This course will examine how age is represented in cinema. This includes social, political, and psychological considerations of aging across a wide range of cinema and history, starting with childhood, moving through adolescence, into middle age, and concluding with later life. Students will be directed to study their own age roles in addition to those they have endured and those they have yet to experience. We will examine how different movies have interpreted these stages and what those depictions signify in terms of our chronological experiences of growth, change, and decline. While identifying characteristic of aging are shared by all, seldom is this topic considered in film and media studies.

NOTE: This course combines principles of modern marketing with the human behavior, and explores how product, price, and promotion are employed to cater to consumers. Both modern and historic marketing efforts will be discussed and compared as will psychological principles and their relevance. Students will gain an understanding how the process works, how manipulation often occurs, and how this knowledge helps consumers - and students - make more educated purchase decisions.

*3907 IDIS 435-001 INTERDIS RESEARCH SEMINAR 4 SEM MW 03:00PM -04:15PM DH 126 STAFF

NOTE: This class is a topic-oriented research seminar that will analyze various labor movements in the United States using an interdisciplinary methodology. The course will look at the intersectional impacts of phenomena such as: feminism, race ethnicity, culture, public administration, and environmental concerns to better understand the underlying philosophies and assumptions of the broad category of American labor movements. This class will emphasize an interdisciplinary lens that guides students to complete a research project on American labor movements in accordance with their chosen tracks within Interdisciplinary Studies.

NOTE: This course surveys Japanese animated productions in historical and cross-disciplinary contexts. Anime has become globally prominent, showing its appeal to universal human interests. To help students comprehend the ways it does this, the course will introduce a diversity of approaches drawn from the arts, history, and the social sciences. We will examine major artists responsible for the growth of the industry, and then analyze important subgenres of these art forms. The course will illustrate the range of this popular culture, and deepen students' appreciation of why these stories are so engrossing.
